PARIS FURNISHED WITH EX-CITEMENT FOR A TIME.

The arrival of the fugitives was devoid of sensational incidents, as the French police had chosen an hour for their return here when Paris was only half awake. The crowd at the railroad station was comparatively small, but a large force of police and soldiers, mounted and on foot, was drawn up in front of the station and guarded all the street approaches in order to prevent the possibility of a popular demonstration. The party passed through double lines of police to the carriages in waiting. Detachments of mounted police officers surrounded the vehicles, which were driven at a rattling pace through the gathering crowds to the conciergerie, where minute preparations had been made to receive the prisoners.

All-absorbing Topic. The return of the Humberts to Paris s the absorbing topic for discussion throughout the city-indeed, throughout France—as no event since the re-turn of Dreyfus has aroused such in-tense interest. All classes of society are equally interested, as the Hum-berts' operations were so colossal and so interwoven with some of the fore-most personages in France that their return was viewed with apprehension. return was viewed with apprehension. The public had doubted the sincerity of the government in ever attempting o bring back the fugitives, owing to he political and social shock which was sure to follow, but the arrival of the prisoners is now generally accepted as showing the purpose of the authorities to spare no means for the prosecution and punishment of the accused. The plans for the prosecution of the Humberts have not yet been announced.
